

Call for Proposals: International Studying Leadership Conference
Dec. 10–12, 2017
University of Richmond, Richmond, Virginia, USA

The conference organizers invite proposals for panels and papers addressing questions of and topics related to leadership and leadership studies for next year's ISLC annual conference. The conference theme for 2017 is "Leadership, Dissent, and Disobedience: Leaders and Followers in a Populist Age." Many parts of the world today are observing increasing numbers of populist movements and cults of personality forming around demagogues and anti-establishment figures. For this year's ISLC, the organizers are seeking papers, panels, and posters from a variety of disciplines, including the social sciences, humanities, critical management, and business, as well as leadership studies, with a particular interest in those that address the conference theme.

Individual paper and poster proposals are welcome, as are fully organized panels and partial panel proposals.

Paper proposals should include titles and abstracts of 100–150 words in length. Panel proposals should include titles and abstracts (100–150 words) for each proposed paper in addition to the presenters' contact information. Poster proposals should include titles and a brief (100–150 word) description of the project.

All proposals are due by July 31st, 2017, to ISLC2017@richmond.edu.

Conference details may be found here: <http://jepson.richmond.edu/islc>.